Ice in the Arctic Regions,

The uelceky prisoner in the field of ice durng the imposing, unbroken loneliness of the long Arclic night, when the wind is calm, can hear the enckle of the snow under the sicality tread of the pelar bear at an astenishing dis tauce, and hear what a man, speaking loud, says at 1,000 meters' distance ! It can, therefore, be well understood how the sound of the ier pressures must travel to his car from enermous distances.

"Sometimes," the author writes, "the noise of the ice movements was senie ly to be heard -a mere murmur-and come to our core as does the play of the waves on a steep coast from the far distance. Sometimes it hummed and toured closer to us, as if a whole column ti heavily laden wagons were being drawn over the uneven ice surface. In the sound were combined all manner of noises caused by cruck ing, guinding, falling of blocks, crushing, and many other phenomena of ice life. It is as torishing how far and how clearly every nois is conducted on the ice. The noise at the very margin of the field on which we were, seemed to occur immediately at our feet. If we placed our ear to the ier the sound was heard so loud ly that we might have expected the ice to open under our feet the next moment. The whele dry ice covering was as a vest sounding board. Whenever, as I lay down to sleep, I placed my ear against the dry, wooden ship's side, I heard a humming and a buzzing which was nothing olse but the sum of all the noises whic's occurred in the ice at great distances from the ship.

A curious feet is described by the author, that the surface of an expanse of young salt water ice on which no snow has yet fallen is solt, so that the footstep is impressed upon its white covering as in melting snow. This is to be ob served even at a temperature of ferry degrees C. The unfrezen fluid is not water, but a con contrated solution of sale thrown out by the freezing of the ice beneath. When summer begins, the thawing that econis is very local and unequal. Any dark body, such as a heap of ashes or the droppings o bears, cars its way into the snow, absorbing the rays of heat which are reflected off again by the general white surface. The bear droppings cat their way into the snow, and then into the ice, and the emical belothus formed fills itself with water. It may, at last, eat its way right through the ice where not very thick. Thus are formed the greater part of these holes in drift ice which are usually ascribed to scale .-The author never saw a seat's hele is winter.

Loebergs are suljected to disintegration after somewhat the same manner as rocks so commoel, are. They are full of crevasses, into which the water formed by meling penetrales; in winter this water freezes, and by its expansion all through the glacier a rupture of the mais ensues. It is highly probable that most of the icebergs affoat in the water are in such a condition that a very slight cause is sufficient to make them burst because of their state of internal tension. Every polar travel r can tell how a shot, the driving is of an ice archer. or any other sudden vibration, has breught about c'imate to which they are exposed, - Nature, WASTED LIVES .- Some time since the whol nation was startled by a terrible tragidy. Three maiden ladies, who were sisters and lived to gether in Chicago, resolved to put an ead to their lives. They deliberately talked the matter over, and made arrangements to accomplish their object and to avoid intrusion. When the hour that had been set apart for the fatal deed came the heart of the youngest sister failed her. She sat above shivering and mosning while her two sisters carried cut their issane resolutions, and by their own act passed from this world to their final account.

These women belonged to a respectable famiily. They were people of education and refinement of habit and tastes. They had lost no friends, suffered from no disease. Their only gricvance in life was that they had recently lest a lawsuit which deprived them of their in-

There was no earthly reason why, like thousands of other women, they should not have gene heartily to work to care their own living honestly. But it appears that they had been taught when children that the object of life wes to make a display in the fashionable so-ciety of their town. When they failed in this so merbid was their ambition that moner than go to work and so lose easte in the eyes of their foolish, fashionable aquaintances, they preferred death.

This extreme case will, no doubt, shock many a mother and young girl whose solions and aims in life are every whit as foolish and false. to order to wear a certain trimming, or cut of gown, or to visit in some pretty clique in their town or village, they sacrifies all the great and real uses of life. We have seen a kirl disappointed in not mar rying a rich man whose wealth would have grew older settle down into a bitter, sellish, wretched womas. Was not this, to, selfmurder, and that of the soul? OSCAR F. BAGGETT,
